Problem 3: Disrespectful Attitude

Respect for authority is a big problem for many of today's children. Today's selfish culture causes children to think they should always get their way and treat others, including their parents, in a disrespectful way. Many children whine or throw tantrums to get what they want – and often parents give in. Treating others disrespectfully is a symptom of a much deeper problem with selfishness.

Solution: Set a positive example by treating others, including your child, with respect in all circumstances. How do you talk to your spouse about your unfair boss after a hard day at work? What did you say about the driver who cut you off in traffic? Remember, your child will model what he sees and hears from you.

Start teaching respectful language and manners at an early age. A sassy attitude that seems cute for your toddler will be a nightmare to change later. Do not allow your child to speak to you or anyone else in a disrespectful way. Expect your child to use polite manners, speak in a calm tone, and use words that reflect his respect for another's feelings. Praise him for using his words well.

Do not give in to your child's begging or tantrums. Ignore your child when he whines to get your attention. Only respond to requests that are presented in a polite, respectful way. Children are more likely to use a disrespectful tone when they are hungry, tired, or angry. So help your child get enough rest, provide a balanced diet, and teach him to resolve conflict appropriately in order to prevent potential attitude problems.

Time and Patience

Do not expect your child to master control of his tongue overnight. Pray and ask God to help you teach your child to tame his tongue. Be sure to praise your child when he tells the truth, refrains from using foul language, and speaks to others with respect. With consistency and perseverance, the tongue that roars like a beast can someday purr like a kitten!

Taming Tips

Teach your child to monitor what she says by remembering these simple rules.

Think before you speak. Words blurted out can never be taken back.

Be respectful. Always treat others with kindness and avoid whining.

Speak with purity. Refrain from using vulgar or profane words.

Tell the truth. Help your child understand that telling lies or half-truths, sharing gossip, or making up stories is not acceptable.

Please God. What would God think of what you have to say?
